

Frogs - Where are You??

There is nothing that heralds the arrival of Spring like the sound of the spring peepers. I enjoyed listening to their chorus when it was warm enough a couple weeks ago to open the windows and hear them singing in the evening from the creek in the backyard. But frogs are often hard to see - especially now that the weather has turned cold again! To get a wonderful close up peek at spring peepers and other frogs, take a look at Nic Bishop's book Frogs. It's filled with beautiful color photographs of a variety of frogs and fascinating facts about them, too.

(Did you know that frog skin comes in every color and can even be see-through?) If you prefer butterflies or lizards to frogs, Nic Bishop has gorgeous books about those creatures, too, all recommended for children in grades 2-6.

Until the weather warms up again and the spring peepers resume their song, you can listen and watch them in the Naturesound Studio video.

Posted by Lisa C. on April 1, 2011

Oh, the Thinks You Can Think

Reviews Subjects:

Nonfiction

Science & Nature

Reviews Titles:

Nic Bishop frogs